The projection screen is a device mounted in front of a passive screen in order to project a multimedia image created by a projector on the passive screen and to allow the image to be viewed simultaneously in a specific area within a multiuser environment. The projection screen is to provide a new visual experience, and currently, the projection screen is increasingly being applied to various areas such as amusement parks, conference halls, exhibition rooms, or outdoor events. Meanwhile, with the rapid development of the information industry, the information services are increasingly being provided through a communication network, and a projection screen may be connected to a network such as a local area network (LAN) or a wide area network (WAN). In this regard, a projection screen with a network connection function is widely adopted, so that the user can view multimedia data being transmitted through the network from the server provided in the network in an enhanced user experience through the network connection. The server is not only used for the multimedia data, but also to provide additional services. For example, the user is provided with a service where the server simultaneously transmits a game according to the user's request and the game is projected on the projection screen. However, the conventional projection screen has a disadvantage in that the server and the projector are connected to the projection screen in an asymmetrical manner. FIG. 1 is a conceptual diagram illustrating the conventional projection screen. Referring to FIG. 1, a projector 1 outputs an image and transmits it to a passive screen 4, and a transmission line 2 is provided to connect the projector 1 to the passive screen 4. The transmission line 2 may be a coaxial cable. The passive screen 4 is disposed in front of the projection screen, and the passive screen 4 serves to provide an imaging surface for the image output from the projector 1. FIG. 2 is a flowchart illustrating a method for transmitting the image to the passive screen 4 and displaying the image thereon. In the method illustrated in FIG. 2, the image is transmitted to the passive screen 4 via the transmission line 2. Referring to FIG. 2, at step S10, the projector 1 transmits the image from the projector 1 and the passive screen 4 receives the image from the projector 1 via the transmission line 2. At step S20, the passive screen 4 displays the image received from the projector 1 and transmits the image to a projector 4. However, the transmission of the image may be restricted by the transmission line 2. Thus, the transmission
