Teacher: Those were the first computer games. There was a man named Roger Abbott who invented these games. The first of his type was "Benny Hill." There was also an earlier version called "Adventures of Lolo." There were no graphics, and it was a text-only game. "Adventures of Lolo" was created by a man named Will Crowther in 1957. He was an English teacher in the "Benny Hill School" in London. He came up with a way to connect "Benny Hill" to the actual events of the day. "Lolo" was his middle name. "Lolo" is Spanish for "young" or "small." He and a friend were playing cards at a party, and he made up the characters, the scenario, and the ending. This was a very popular form of entertainment in the sixties. It made it possible to buy or read a book or play a game and make your own decisions. You could follow the story the way you wanted. In "Benny Hill," the main character was called "Benny Hill." He and his family were living in a "depressing little town." He didn't have any money. He had a wife and three kids. He was a radio and television personality. One day, he was invited to appear on the "Penny Lane" TV show. The host was singing a catchy tune, "a strange 82157476af
